- 2 In 'An Astrologer's day' written by R.K. Narayan - an unnamed astrologer who predicts his customer's future. but in reality he is only pretending to be an astrologer and guesses by his wits and lucks, one midday when the astrologer opens his professional equipment that contains a dozen cowrie shells, a piece of cloth of obscure mystic charts and notebooks, Palmistry writing on his forehead resplendent ash and vermillion and his eyes sparkle with gleam and he wears a saffron turban this all things are enough for the attraction of customer's. He did not wanted to become an astrologer but he thought he had killed someone in his past and had the blood of a man so he ran away from his village. By this we can know that the astrologer is hiding something mystery about himself which he reveals at the end of the story.
- 3 In 'The luncheon' written by W. Somerset Maugham, the luncheon is the experience of the narrator's life itself where he meets a lady for lunch. The lady had read his novel and had written a letter to him, in return the narrator sent a thank you letter, the lady wrote a another letter where she mentioned that she would like a luncheon with the author at Foyot's restaurant - an expensive restaurant and had mentioned that she doesn't eat more than one thing for lunch, But after the author meets the lady he is being cheated as the lady goes on ordering the expensive dishes till the author doesn't even have a penny left in his pocket. this way the narrator feels cheated by the lady who had said she will not eat more than one thing

4. In the 'Night of the Scorpion' written by Nizim Ezekiel. The poet's mother is stung by a scorpion on her toe, she steadily lain for ten hours, the villagers started to gather in their house and started saying the superstitions but the poet's father was a rationalist man, who did not care about anything he tried every possible way to stop the poison, he mixed herbs, powders to the and applied to the toe at last he put some paraffin to the toe and burnt it so after twenty.

how the poison was realised this way we can come to know that the navigator's father was a man who did not believe superstitions and only focused on how to cure the mother rather than panicking.

- 9 In "An Astrologer's Day" written By R.K. Narayan Rasipuram Krishnaswami Narayan who goes under the name of R.K. Narayan is the first Indian writer to write in English. He writes include novels, short-stories and memories..

In the "An Astrologer's Day" it is a short story of an untrained astrologer's who predicts his customer's life, and pretends to be an astrologer, But in reality he predicts future by his wits and luck. This story focuses on one day where he meets a man, who he had tried to kill in his past life..

The story starts on a midday where the astrologer opens his bag of his professional equipment that contains a dozen cowrie shells, a square piece of cloth has obscure mystic charts on it, a notebook and a bundle of Palmyra writing

The astrologer on his forehead a resplendent of ash and vermillion, and his eyes sparkle with a gleam. On his forehead he wears a saffron-coloured turban which never fails to attract the costumers. He sits under the boughs of the saffron-tamarind yellow palmyra weaving tree through the town hall paths. Surrounding to him their are many sellers like medicine sellers, sellers of stolen junk and ware, magicians and a auctioneer. Next to him is the fried groundnut seller who changes his shop name daily like "Bombay-ice-cream", "Delhi almond" and "Raja's delicacy".

The astrologer doesn't have his light of own the light he gets from his from the fried groundnut shop, and from the bright lights from the surroundings shops which is enough for astrologer, the costumers who come to buy the groundnuts are even attracted by the astrologer too.

The astrologer did not even have a plan to become an astrologer, he ran away from the village because he thought he had killed someone and his blood was on his hands. If he had not ran away from village then he could have did his forefather's works like tilling the land and marrying and harvesting the wasteland.

The astrologer was not an real astrologer he used to pretend, and guess his customers life. He would let the customer speak atleast for ten minutes so that he would get enough information to say. He charged three pies per question.

For every person he would ask three questions
① Most of your efforts are not getting the fullest result, ② there is a woman in your life who or maybe distant relative who is not well disposed towards you ③ all these is because of your character otherwise why will Saturn be otherwise. Most of these questions were agreed by ten out of nine customers.

As the friedgroundnut man closed his shop it was time for the astrologer to close too. At one day while closing, the far away green shaft of light was covered by a man, standing in front of astrologer, the astrologer expecting a customer said to man "you look pale why don't you sit and have a chat with me"

The man sat and the astrologer ~~he~~ started his usual things and the man said stop I don't want all that just say me will I be successful in my present search or not" the astrologer said. I charge three pies per question if you find my answers satisfactory can you give me five rupees the man said no, he then demanded 8 annas the man lift his cheepot and the astrologer was able to see his face.

The astrologer felt uncomfortable and said he was not used to those challenges and said the man to meet him tomorrow, but the man held his wrist and said challenge is a challenge, the astrologer sat and said. that give me one Rupee otherwise I won't open my mouth"

After a agreement, the astrologer said "you were left to death, a knife has passed ~~thru~~ through you, the man showed the stab, and asked more, he said and you were thrown into the well, the man was surprised to hear that and said yes, if a passerby had not seen me then I could have died. and the man asked when will I get to him, the astrologer said "Guru Nayak" the man said how do you know my name, the astrologer continued "as I know all things guru Nayak, your village is two days journey to north, do not come to southward again because there is some danger I see to you, and the man who tried to kill you has already died under a lorry. The man became happy and hung all the coins to the astrologer and went. The astrologer came late to home and his wife asked him and he said he had a customer and flung the coins he had earned, she counted and they were twelve and half annas, the astrologer was not happy because the man said he would give one rupee, the wife said he would make some sweets because the children had asked.

After dinner the astrologer sat on the pyol and said to his wife that a great road has gone from me, I tried to kill someone and thought I had the blood on me, the wife said you tried to kill, yes when I was a youngster, we drunk and gambled and had a fight, said the astrologer and said why think of it now let's sleep.

By this short-story of mystery we can say that R.K. Narayan was a great writer who captured the imagination of the readers.

- 10 "The Luncheon" written by W. Somerset Maugham. W. Somerset Maugham, a British playwright, novelist and short story writer and was also called as master of concise novels. His works were included in the second mate. The story the luncheon contains irony and the real life.

experience of the narrator's life itself.

The story starts at a play where the narrator meets the lady who he had met twenty-years ago, and the lady says to him that she had brought her some luncheon and make him remember to it.

Twenty-years ago, when the narrator was living in the Paris in ~~some~~ small Catin Quartiers. A lady who had read his novels and wrote a letter to him about her thoughts on it, in return the narrator sent a thanking letter.

The lady again wrote a letter which she mentioned that she would like to a lunch with the narrator at Foyot's Restaurant the expensive restaurant where the French gentlemen dine in, the narrator was young and could not say no to a woman, their meeting was fixed on Thursday at half-past twelve (12:30).

The narrator and the woman met, the lady was not young and attractive, she was in her forties and very talkative, &

The expensive menu arrived and as for Anthony's thinking he ~~was~~ had only 80 francs and thought that the meal would cost for 15 francs, which he would cut his coffee for next two weeks, and he remembered that the lady had already mentioned she would not eat more than one thing. the menu arrived.

the lady first ordered some salmon which was expensive dish, till salmon was to be cooked she ordered caviar. and the navigator ordered the cheapest dish which was mutton chop, and the lady said that the navigator was quite a heavy eater.

the salmon and caviar arrived the lady had it, when it was time for some drink she said her doctor has said not to drink but would go with champagne, the navigator ordered half - a bottle of it. while eating the lady talked about art, music and literature. But the navigator's mind was still thinking about how much the bill would come, the lady again ordered aspargues which is most expensive dish, the navigator thought that if the bill came more than expected then he would put his hand in the pocket and make a dramatic cry that his money was stolen and if the lady did not have money then he would keep his watch and pay the bill later, the lady ate the aspargues, the navigator held his emotions of eating it, after eating she said to the navigator that she believed one thing that was one should get up from meat as if they could eat more the navigator scowled and asked if she was still hungry she said "No"

He ordered coffee for himself and coffee and ice-cream for the lady, the head waiter with some peaches came to the navigator's table and the navigator knew that it was not a season for peaches and they would cost more. In thinking he ate a peach and was stopped by the lady saying that you have filled your stomach heavily by eating a meat but I had a snack let me enjoy them.

The bill came and the navigator was left with only three francs and even then the lady had eyes on those, which the navigator left it for tip, he knew that the lady thought him mean, after coming out of restaurant they shook hands, and the navigator had the whole month in front of his eyes without a single penny left in his pocket and the lady said follow my example do not have more than one thing for lunch the navigator humorously said I will do better I will not have anything for dinner at night, she jumped into the cab and left and after twenty years the narrator feels she had his revenge because she weighed twenty one stone (134 kg).
